

This parking lot fiasco 80 ft. across all gravel. All trying to hide her parking lot wants.

All for not, the driveway entrance has a line of site problem. She seems to think cutting trees and removing part of a hill in the line of site will fix her problem. Its town property my friend , most of the hill and trees are on the town side of the property line (stone wall is the property line).

The property was just surveyed. Should not be much of a problem to have them back to mark up this line of site thing. Making sure you remember the angle of the driveway is to great and also needs to come down the proper height. I ask

This should be put on hold till you get a survey.

I think going that way is the wrong answer to the problem.

Remember this is still only a single lane road. If you go 80 ft toward Brown Rd the road is now a two lane road and much more likely to handle the vast increase in traffic.